New Corporate Website to Focus on Customer Relationships

Durham, Connecticut - September 2006 - Technical Manufacturing Corporation announced this month that it has unveiled their completely redesigned corporate website. The new website was developed in conjunction with Unifusion Web Design which is located in Hillsboro, Oregon who was selected based upon previous positive experience with the company. According to Mr. David Bonito, Sales and Marketing Manager for Technical Manufacturing Corporation, the new website "was completely redesigned from the ground up with people in mind rather than simply focusing on assembly technology." He noted that the new site will "emphasize how important interpersonal relationships are in determining the success of an outsourcing strategy". "Close relationships with the customer provide the communication necessary to ensure that their unique requirements are fully understood, especially between the different industries that we serve", said Mr. Bonito. The new corporate website took about two months to develop and will prominently feature a News and Events spotlight on the home page to inform customers of important activities taking place around the company. The website will be maintained internally at the company's offices located in Durham and will be under the responsibility of the Sales and Marketing Department. The company's website which was first published in 1996 is an integral part of the company's overall communication strategy which includes printed literature, trade shows and sales representation.
