Company Reaches and Celebrates Twenty Five Year Anniversary Milestone

Durham, Connecticut – January 2010 – Technical Manufacturing Corporation announced this month that this year marks the company's twenty five year anniversary in business as a contract electronics manufacturing (CEM) service provider. Originally started in 1985 with a small handful of employees as Burton Electronics, the privately held company primarily serviced the wire interconnect and cable harness requirements of local New England based accounts in what was then a small but growing industry. The company was acquired in its entirety soon thereafter by existing management who subsequently renamed it as Technical Manufacturing Corporation to more accurately describe the company's main business activity as an electronics manufacturing service provider.

Since then, the company has greatly expanded and grown into a world-class operation that provides a wide array of electronics manufacturing services and support to the electronics industry. Today, the company offers printed circuit board, interconnect wire, cable harness and complete box build assemblies nation-wide to Original Equipment Manufacturers (OEM) and Original Design Manufacturers (ODM) of all sizes ranging from small to Fortune 500 corporations operating primarily in the aerospace, defense, medical, automotive and telecommunications industries. The company has remained as a privately held company and is currently run by the next generation management team that has more than one hundred years of combined experience in the electronics industry to help ensure the future continued success of the company.

In celebration of reaching this significant milestone, the company is planning several employee related events throughout the year to recognize the dedication, efforts and hard work that they have contributed over the years to help make the achievement of this milestone possible. Additional company luncheons, outings, picnics and other events surrounding the anniversary celebration will also be planned to recognize various employee contributions during the course of the year.
